

About the Author

Steve Linn is a retired businessman and entrepreneur who loves using his creativity to bring joy to others. His small-town roots and deep love for God, family, and country have guided him throughout both his career and his life.

Growing up in Louisiana, Steve spent countless hours reading wholesome and magical stories that sparked his imagination and encouraged him to dream big.

Steve married his wife, Debbie, in 1989. Together, they are blessed with four children and four grandchildren. His 47-year career in the lumber and building supply industry was filled with adventure, hard work, and many blessings.

In 2025, Steve retired and moved with Debbie and their two lovable dogs, Cooper and George, to Patriot Pointe, a beautiful lakeside community on Lake Eufaula in Oklahoma.

Inspired by their two dogs, the area's breathtaking sunsets, peaceful forests, and the joy of storytelling, Steve created The Magic of Patriot Pointe—a heartwarming book series that celebrates friendship, adventure, kindness, and the wonder of imagination.

Dedication

For our family, and for all families, children, and grandchildren who believe in strength, kindness, doing what is right, respecting others, honoring our freedoms, and loving this great country.

For those who still believe in old-fashioned fun, a little magic, and the joy found in simple moments.

And most of all, to my wife, Debbie—my rock, my sounding board, and my partner through every page of this adventure.

Thank you for believing in this dream and helping bring the magic to life.

With love,

Steve

Introduction

Some places look ordinary at first.
A quiet road. A peaceful lake. A forest of tall trees.
But every once in a while...
you find a place that is anything but ordinary.
Patriot Pointe is one of those places.
Tucked beside Lake Eufaula, magic lives quietly here.
It shimmers on the water at sunrise...
and stirs beneath the stars at night.
When Steve and Debbie arrived with George and Cooper,
they thought they were moving to a beautiful new home.
They didn't know the forest was watching.
They didn't know the animals were listening.
Because at Patriot Pointe... animals can talk.
But only when adult humans are not near.
And if the secret is ever broken...
the magic disappears.
So listen closely...
magic is real... if you believe.

The Road to Patriot Pointe

The Linn's had dreamed of this day for a very long time. At last, they were moving into their dream home by a beautiful lake in the rolling hills of Eastern Oklahoma.

The road was long and twisty. It wound through tall trees and over soft hills.

Sunlight peeked through the leaves and danced on the ground.

The afternoon would soon fade into evening and they hoped to settle in before sundown.

In the back seat sat two dogs.

George was big, calm, and quiet.

Cooper was small, bouncy, and full of energy.

Steve smiled. “I think someone is excited.”

Debbie laughed. “We’re almost there.”

The truck slowed. Ahead stood an entrance with a wooden sign that read:

PATRIOT POINTE

Through the Gate

As the truck rolled through the gate, the air felt different.

George blinked. Cooper froze. George opened his mouth.

“Cooper?” he said. Cooper gasped.

“George?! You talked!” They stared at each other.

“I can hear you!” Cooper whispered.

“I can hear you too!” George whispered back.

Cooper quickly covered his mouth. “Can humans hear us?”

George looked toward the front seat.

“I don’t think they can,” George whispered.

High in a tall tree, a pair of golden eyes watched.

“They’ve crossed the gate,” said a calm voice.

A raccoon peeked out from behind a log. “They look nice,” he whispered.

A turtle lifted her head and smiled. “The magic has begun.”

The truck pulled up to a cozy house by the lake.

The water shimmered behind it.

The movers waved goodbye, and the Linn family settled into their new home they named

“Sunset Haven.”

Voices in the Forest

That night, the house grew still.

The moon climbed high.

George and Cooper lay in their beds.

“George?” Cooper whispered. “Yes?”

“Are we allowed to talk?”

Before George could answer—

“Hoo-hoo!” A soft voice drifted through the trees.

“Welcome to Patriot Pointe. The rules must Be Shared.”

“...Rules?” they whispered.
